Introduction

G W L Marshall-Hall was born in Hyde Park, London in 1862 and died in Melbourne on 18 July 1915. Born into a medical family, Marshall-Hall studied from the age of sixteen at Kings College, London, and then in Montreux in Switzerland. Destined for the civil service, he decided on music as a career. From 1880 he studied in Berlin, before returning to London in 1882 to further study at the Royal College of Music, where his teachers included Sir Hubert Parry and Frederick Bridge. The then Director of the College, Sir George Grove recognised his talent, and his wide interest in literature and in the history of music. Sir George wrote that Marshall-Hall was a man with an ‘inquiring turn of mind’, and ‘there is some evidence of a temper of no mean order’. He was beginning to make a mark for himself as a composer in England, but in 1887 an advertisement appeared for the position of the inaugural Ormond Professor of Music at The University of Melbourne. His application for the position was successful, and he arrived in Melbourne in January 1891 to take up the post. He quickly established a reputation for bohemianism, as a musician who could inspire both students and staff, and as a conductor. Marshall-Hall’s programming in concerts was adventurous and demanding, and his output as a composer ranged from two operas to two symphonies, several orchestral tone poems, chamber works and many songs.

His success was tempered by the publication of a series of provocative poems under the title of Hymns Ancient and Modern, which inflamed the Anglican establishment.1 Although not devoid of defenders, Marshall-Hall’s tenure as professor was not renewed in 1900. But after a long period of controversy, he was eventually re-appointed as Ormond Professor in July 1914, only one year before his untimely death in 1915. His career and music are thoroughly examined in Dr Thérèse Radic’s excellent study G.W.L. Marshall-Hall A Biography and Catalogue.2

Marshall-Hall had shown support for the young Percy Grainger, and in 1938 Grainger repaid the debt by purchasing Marshall-Hall’s scores from his widow and only son. They are now housed in The Grainger Museum at The University of Melbourne. His grandson, Marshall-Hall Inman bequeathed a sum that provided the resources for the setting up of The Marshall-Hall Trust, which publishes and supports research and performance of Australia’s earlier music. The Trust has published numerous volumes of early Australian Music, and studies, including Thérèse Radic’s Biography and Catalogue mentioned in footnote two, and assisted in the publication of Marshall-Hall’s Melbourne Music, Art and Controversy 1891–1915.3

Marshall-Hall started work composing his opera Stella over a ten week period from September 1909 until 4 February 1910, and he completed the orchestration of the work by 12 May of the same year. It is an opera set in Melbourne, and could be best described as Australian verismo but with a post Wagnerian influence. Some of the orchestration and vocal writing is very beautiful, especially so in the aria Tired Nature which is in this volume MDA039. The work was published in full score in 1992 in a fine edition by Dr Suzanne Robinson. In the full score the History of Stella and the synopsis of the opera are thoroughly described. The work is a very dramatic one, and it contains very direct references to the cabals and narrow personalities that beset Marshall-Hall during his time as Ormond Professor and in the following years, by the inclusion of the singing of the Committee of the Social Purity Society. The aria is presented here in both full orchestral score and a vocal score for ready performance.5

4 G W Marshall-Hall, Stella, an Opera in One Act (Melbourne: Centre for Studies in Australian Music, The University of Melbourne, 1992). A vocal score was issued in the same series but there are some important errors in the publication of this aria in vocal score, which has necessitated it being redrafted and republished.

5 The first performance of this aria since the composer’s death in 1915 with full orchestral accompaniment was given at Monash University in February 2014 by Victorian Opera and the Monash Academy Orchestra conducted by Dr Richard Mills.
